Contact Information and Bios of Conference Participants

Fallon Ahearn
University of Michigan
fahearn@umich.edu

Annette Alstadsæter
Norwegian School of Economics and Business Administration
annette.alstadsater@nhh.no

Tarek Anandan
Ford School of Public Policy
University of Michigan
tanandan@umich.edu

Sebastian Auguste
University of Michigan
sauguste@umich.edu

Charles L. Ballard
Professor
Michigan State University
ballard@msu.edu
Tel.: (517) 353-2961

Jered Carr
Assistant Professor
Wayne State University
j carr@wayne.edu
Tel.: (313) 577-2639

John Chamberlin
Professor
University of Michigan
johnch@umich.edu
Tel.: (734) 763-2258

Annette Alstadsæter is a Ph.D.-student, Norwegian School of Economics and Business Administration, presently a guest at OTPR. Her research interests are focused on optimal tax policy; income tax and educational choice; taxing small businesses.

Tarek Anandan is a masters student at the Ford School of Public Policy, University of Michigan. He studies domestic social policy, specifically drug policy and workforce issues. He also manages the Social Science Data Analysis Network of the University's Population Studies Center.

Charles L. Ballard is Professor of Economics at Michigan State University. He received his Ph.D. from Stanford University in 1983, and joined the MSU faculty in that same year. His main research interests are in public economics. He has written on the efficiency and distributional effects of changes in taxes and transfers, as well as the effects of environmental taxes and subsidies, and the effects of taxes and tariffs on the international economy. His research has been published in major professional journals, including American Economic Review, Journal of Economic Perspectives, Journal of Public Economics, and National Tax Journal. Professor Ballard received the MSU Teacher-Scholar Award in 1990, and the John D. and Dortha J. Withrow Teacher/Scholar Award in 2000. He is one of the editors of a forthcoming volume of research papers on the Michigan economy. He works extensively with the news media. He has consulted with the U.S. Department of Treasury and the U.S. Department of Agriculture, as well as with research institutes in Australia, Denmark, and Finland.

Jered Carr is an Assistant Professor in the Department of Political Science at Wayne State University in Detroit, Michigan. His research focuses on the implications of local government autonomy for regional economic development and local government revenue and expenditure patterns. His edited book (with Richard Feiock) examining city-county consolidation and alternative strategies to formal consolidation will be published by M.E. Sharpe in 2003.

John Chamberlin is Professor of Political Science and Public Policy at the Ford School of Public Policy at the University of Michigan, where he has been a member of the faculty since 1970. He received his B.S. in Industrial Engineering from Lehigh University and his Ph.D. from the Graduate School of Business at Stanford University. His research interests include ethics and public policy, legislative redistricting, political representation and election systems, and mathematical models of politics. His teaching interests include ethics and public policy, statistics, nonprofit organizations, and mathematical models of politics. He is chair of Common Cause in Michigan and served as a member of the National Governing Board of Common Cause from 1996-2002
Julie Cullen has been an Assistant Professor of Economics at the University of Michigan since she received her Ph.D. from MIT in 1997. Her research falls broadly in the field of public economics, with an emphasis on issues in the economics of education and social insurance programs. Recent papers explore the impact of school choice on student outcomes, the relationship between taxes and entrepreneurial activity, and the welfare implications of increasing disability benefits.

Ellen Dannin’s research interest falls mainly into the areas of privatization and collective bargaining. She is currently working on privatization of information technology and data collection; privatization and issues of accountability; and privatization as a growth industry for law firms.

Eduardo Engel is a Professor of Economics at Yale University. His research interests include: Macroeconomics (employment and investment dynamics, external shocks and stabilization), public finance (private participation in infrastructure, tax evasion), and applied stochastic models (forecasting models).

Richard C. Feiock is Professor and Ph.D Program Director of Askew School of Public Administration and Policy and directs the Program in Local Governance of the DeVoe L. Moore Center at Florida State University (http://www.fsu.edu/~localgov/). He is co-author of Institutional Constraints and Policy Choice (SUNY Press) with Jim Clingermayer and has published widely on issues of local political institutions, economic development, land use regulation, and service delivery.

Elisabeth R. Gerber is Professor of Public Policy and Director of the Center for Local, State, and Urban Policy. Her research interests focus on the policy consequences of electoral laws and other political institutions; her current research involves a study of local political institutions and the formation of land use policy. She has written articles on minorities and direct legislation, reform strategies, legislative responses to referendum, voting strategies and primaries. Her recent books include Voting at the Political Fault Line: California’s Experiment with the Blanket Primary (2001); Stealing the Initiative: How State Government Responds to Direct Democracy (2000); and The Populist Paradox: Interest Group Influence and the Promise of Direct Legislation(1999). Prior to her appointment at Michigan, Professor Gerber was a member of the faculty of University of California, San Diego. She received her Ph.D. in Political Science from the University of Michigan.
James R. Hines Jr. is Professor of Business Economics at the University of Michigan Business School, Professor of Economics in the Economics Department, and Professor of Public Policy in the Ford School of Public Policy. He is also Research Director at the Office of Tax Policy Research. Professor Hines holds a B.A. and M.A. from Yale University, and a Ph.D. from Harvard, all in economics. He taught at Princeton and at Harvard before moving to Michigan in 1997. He is a Research Associate of the National Bureau of Economic Research, and was previously an economist in the United States Department of Commerce. Hines studies tax policy, particularly the taxation of multinational corporations. His work concerns the determinants of foreign direct investment, the influence of tax regimes on the location of R&D and physical investment, transfer pricing, the design of tax treaty policy, and the effects of tax policies on the activities of multinational firms. His research also examines the impact of domestic tax incentives on investment in the United States, issues related to tax compliance, and the impact of tax exemptions for nonprofit organizations in the United States.

Felix Oberholzer-Gee is the Class of 1965 Wharton Term Assistant Professor of Business and Public Policy at the Wharton School, University of Pennsylvania. He received his Ph.D. in Economics from the University of Zurich. His research interests include the interaction between business and (local) governments, questions of political economy and environmental economics. He has written about strategies for siting industrial facilities, local restrictions of business activities, and the impact of information regulation.

Not available.

David Lenter joined OTPR as a full-time staff member in October 2001. Mr. Lenter’s specialty is tax law. He has a 1994 A.B. in American History from Brown University and a 1998 J.D. from Harvard Law School.

Florencio López-de-Silanes is a Professor of Finance and Professor of Economics and Director, International Institute of Corporate Governance at Yale University. Prof. Florencio López-de-Silanes specializes in International Corporate Finance and Financial Markets, Corporate Governance and Legal Reform, Privatization and Deregulation. He is a founding member of the Blue Ribbon Panel on Corporate Governance in Russia and the Committee on Best Corporate Practices in Mexico. He has helped international companies in their efforts to improve their corporate governance practices and has acted as an advisor to stock market commissions in several countries. Professor López-de-Silanes has also been an advisor to the governments of Russia, Peru, Malaysia, Egypt, Yemen, Colombia, Costa Rica and Mexico on issues of financial markets’ regulation, corporate and bankruptcy law reform, industrial policy and privatization. More recently, he has worked as a consultant to the International Monetary Fund and to the World Bank on issues of corporate governance. Prof. López-de-Silanes is also the Director of Yale University’s International Institute of Corporate Governance, carrying out research, teaching executives and regulators and providing policy advice on the relevance of investor protection for the reduction of the cost of capital, the development of capital markets and economic growth. His main publications fall in the areas of corporate finance, legal reform of financial markets, corporate and bankruptcy law, privatization, and trade and industrial policy particularly with respect to NAFTA. He received Harvard's Wells Prize for the Best Dissertation in Economics (1995), the National Award of Law and Economics of the National Association of Law and Economics in Mexico (1996), the Brattle Prize for distinguished paper in the Journal of Finance of the American Finance Association (1999), and the Jensen Prize for the best papers published in the Journal of Financial Economics in the Areas of Corporate Finance and Organizations (2000). He graduated with highest honors from Instituto Tecnológico Autónomo de México, and he has a Masters and a Ph.D. in Economics from Harvard University. Prior to joining the Yale University faculty, he was a professor at Harvard University from 1994 to 2001.
Paul Menchik specializes in Public Economics and the Distribution of Income and Wealth. His current research interests include the effect of the changing demography and both the expenditures made and revenues received by the public sector. Most recently he has done research on how demographic change is expected to impact state governments in general and Michigan in particular. He is also interested in the design of state income tax system and has recently analyzed Michigan's income tax as a contribution to a larger study on Michigan's economy. Menchik has continuing interests in other issues (e.g., modeling the distribution and intergenerational transmission of wealth and the relationship between income and longevity).

William Megginson is Professor and Rainbolt Chair in Finance at the University of Oklahoma's Michael F. Price College of Business. He is also a member of the Italian Ministry of Economics and Finance's Global Advisory Committee on Privatization. Professor Megginson's research interest has focused in recent years on the privatization of state-owned enterprises, especially those privatizations executed through public share offerings. He has published refereed articles in several top academic journals, including the Journal of Economic Literature, the Journal of Finance, the Journal of Financial Economics, the Journal of Financial and Quantitative Analysis, the Journal of Money, Credit, and Banking and Foreign Policy. Dr. Megginson is also author or co-author of five textbooks. He has a B.S. degree in chemistry from Mississippi College, an MBA from Louisiana State University, and a Ph.D. in finance from Florida State University. Professor Megginson has traveled extensively outside the United States, both personally and professionally, and has served as a privatization consultant for the New York Stock Exchange, the OECD, the IMF, the World Federation of Exchanges and the World Bank.

Anne Morrison Piehl, Associate Professor of Public Policy at the John F. Kennedy School of Government, Harvard University, studies the economics of crime and criminal justice. Her research has covered the dynamics of youth violence, the effect of criminal justice policy on immigrants (and vice versa), the relationship between economic opportunity and criminal behavior, and statistical methods used to evaluate social policies. She is currently analyzing discretion in criminal sentencing and studying policies and practices of corrections, including those that govern the release of inmates from prisons and jails. She received her A.B. from Harvard University and her Ph.D. from Princeton University, both in economics.
Dan Silverman
Assistant Professor
Economics Department
University of Michigan
dansilv@umich.edu
Tel.: (734) 764-2447

Joel Slemrod
Professor, Director of OTPR
University of Michigan
Business School
jslemrod@umich.edu
Tel.: (734) 936-3914

Robert Stein
Dean, Professor
School of Social Sciences
Rice University
Stein-a@rice.edu
Tel.: (713) 348-4824

Varsha Venkatesh, Project Manager
Office of Tax Policy Research
University of Michigan
Business School
Varsha@umich.edu
Tel.: (734) 615-3770

Carol Weissert
Professor of Political Science, Director of the Institute for Public Policy and Social Research
Michigan State University
weisert@umich.edu
Tel.: (517) 355-6672

---

Joel Slemrod is the Paul W. McCracken Collegiate Professor of Business Economics and Public Policy at the University of Michigan Business School, and Professor of Economics in the Department of Economics. He also serves as Director of the Office of Tax Policy Research, an interdisciplinary research center housed at the Business School. Professor Slemrod received the A.B. degree from Princeton University in 1973 and the Ph.D. in economics from Harvard University in 1980. He joined the economics department at the University of Minnesota in 1979. In 1983-84 he was a National Fellow at the Hoover Institution and in 1984-85 he was the senior staff economist for tax policy at the President's Council of Economic Advisers. He has been at Michigan since 1987. Professor Slemrod has been a consultant to the U.S. Department of the Treasury, the Canadian Department of Finance, the New Zealand Department of Treasury, the South Africa Ministry of Finance, the World Bank, and the OECD. He is a member of the Congressional Budget Office Panel of Economic Advisers, and has testified before the Congress on domestic and international taxation issues. From 1992 to 1998 Professor Slemrod was editor of the National Tax Journal. He is the author of numerous academic articles and is the editor or co-editor of nine books, including, most recently, Rethinking Estate and Gift Taxation. He is co-author with Jon Bakija of Taxing Ourselves: A Citizen’s Guide to the Great Debate over Tax Reform, now in its second edition.

Robert Stein is the Dean of the School of Social Sciences and Lena Gohlman Fox Professor of Political Science at Rice University. He received his BA in Political Science from Ohio Wesleyan University and attended graduate school at the University of Wisconsin-Milwaukee, where he received his Ph.D. in Political Science in 1977. As Dean, he is responsible for the departments of Anthropology, Economics, Political Science, Psychology and Sociology. In addition to carrying out his duties as Dean, Stein continues to teach and do research in the area of federalism and intergovernmental relations, state and local government, urban politics, and public policy. Both his teaching and research concern federal spending. He is the author of dozens of journal articles on this subject. Stein is also the author of three books on the topic, his most recent titled Perpetuating the Pork Barrel; Policy Subsystems and American Democracy (Cambridge). His current research on federal spending is supported by the National Science Foundation. He has served on the editorial boards of the American Political Science Review, American Journal of Political Science, Journal of Politics and Urban Affairs Review.

Varsha Venkatesh is the Project Manager at the Office of Tax Policy Research. She is responsible for the coordination and management of our ongoing projects, including our most ambitious project, the World Tax Database. She holds an M.A. in Economics from the University of Maryland, College Park.
Clifford Winston, a Senior Fellow in the Economic Studies program, has been with the Brookings Institution since 1984. He specializes in analysis of industrial organization, regulation, and transportation. Dr. Winston received his A.B. in economics from the University of California at Berkeley in 1974, his M.Sc. from the London School of Economics in 1975, and his Ph.D. in economics from U.C. Berkeley in 1979.

Winston has also been co-editor of the annual microeconomic edition of Brookings Papers on Economic Activity. Prior to his fellowship at Brookings, he was Associate Professor at the Transportation Systems Division of Massachusetts Institute of Technology’s Department of Civil Engineering.

Roland Zullo, Ph. D., is a Research Scientist at the Institute of Labor and Industrial Relations, University of Michigan. A former member of the USWA and AFT, Zullo has taught numerous labor education seminars and instructed graduate level coursework in the areas of Collective Bargaining, Labor Management Relations and Industrial Relations Theory. Zullo researches privatization, outsourcing, political mobilization, and collective bargaining.